CHAPTER 1
ELECTRIC CHARGES AND FIELDS
1. What is meant by electrostatics?	Ans. Electrostatics is the branch of physics which deals with charges at rest.
2. Which are the three methods of charging a body?	Ans. The three methods are: a) Rubbing (charging by friction) b) Conduction c) Induction
3. What is the method to charge an insulator?	Ans. Rubbing
4. What are the methods to charge a conductor?	Ans. Conduction and induction.
5. What is frictional electricity? Give an example.	Ans. The charge obtained by a body on rubbing with another body is called frictional electricity. Example: When a glass rod is rubbed with silk, the glass rod gets positively charged and silk gets negatively charged.
6. Give some examples for substances which get charged on rubbing.	Ans. The substances in column I when rubbed with substances in column II, acquire positive charge while substances in column II acquire negative charge.
7. How does a body get charged?	Ans. A body gets charged by the transfer of electrons. The body which loses electrons gets positively charged and the body which gains electrons gets negatively charged.
8. Is the mass of a body affected by charging?	Ans. Yes. A positively charged body loses electrons. Therefore, its mass decreases. A negatively charged body gains electrons. So its mass increases. Example: A definite mass of 9×10^{-19} kg.
9. Distinguish between conductors and insulators. Give examples for both.	Ans. The materials which allow electricity to pass through them easily are called conductors. Example: Metals. The materials which offer a high resistance to the passage of electricity are called insulators. Example: Most of the materials like glass, porcelain, plastic, nylon, wood are insulators.
10. Conductors cannot be charged by rubbing. Is this statement true? Why?
